THE DISAPPEARANCE OF REGINA BROWN

LOST LAKE PRODUCTIONS

INTRODUCTION

The quiet suburb of Newtown Connecticut becomes a scene of disappearance and murder as two stewardess/pilot couples meet perplexing ends.

Burning red flags of abuse turn to a cold case as media sensationalism and racial bias muddy the disappearance of Regina Brown.

“She loved her children, and there is no way she would have gone off and left them.”

— Carol Napolitano, former neighbor

20 Years Gone

Regina Brown's disappearance still baffles Newtown police.

HISTORY

In 1987, the nation was captivated and horrified when a Connecticut man was arrested for murdering his wife with a wood chipper.

Two months later, a woman named Regina Brown, from the same town in Connecticut, vanished without a trace. Regina Brown was 35 years old when she disappeared. A doting mom, she left behind three children, a home, a flight attendant job, an abusive husband who was a pilot and a life in a small suburb of Newtown, CT.

Five months earlier, Helle Crafts went missing. Helle also left behind three children, a home, a flight attendant job, an abusive husband who was a pilot and a life in the small suburb of Newtown, CT. Two months after Helle went missing, her husband Richard was arrested for her murder. The infamous "wood chipper murder" case overshadowed Regina's case and her body was never found. Her case remains unsolved to this day. In an attempt to reinvigorate the search for Regina's remains, this documentary will examine both cases in detail, the striking similarities as well as the glaring differences in police and media attention..
